“ I’m so sorry to be missing all of you. I feel older now because of my cousin’s passing. All the same, we did have fun. My favorite memory of Dorothy is from Hurricane Carla. We got to stay with the Wellsprings because the storm was supposed to hit close to us (of course it hit the Wellspring’s side of town instead). All of the kids slept in one room, and Aunt Kathryn told Dorothy (the oldest among us) to tell us a bedtime story. I don’t remember the story exactly, but it was about a creepy old man who would sneak up to houses to kidnap children. We would know that he was near when we heard scratching on the screens. It just happened that the wind from the hurricane was making the bushes scratch the screens. All of the kids were screaming, and Aunt Kathryn came and fussed at us to go to sleep. So we did. We had such a good time that we never worried about the storm or noticed the electricity being off for two weeks. I told my father that I hoped we’d have another hurricane, and he told me to never say that again. So evidently we all survived and have moved on from that part of life, and I wish you all peace and blessings.
