“ My mom, Where to begin. I will tell you what kind of person my Mom was. I spent the most time with her in her final months in our home. And she had a very unique soul.

A very vivacious person, someone who would always light up the room whenever she entered. She loved everyone. She always made even strangers she never met before laugh every time she was around. Spreading her happiness to the world. She was most happy I think when she was on her own just talking to random people and just plain talking. A very outspoken person she was. Every time she spoke she was a loud one let me tell you. You could always hear her from miles away. Never afraid to tell you her point of view about everything. You know what, I feel sorry for the times I told her to quiet down, you are just being too loud. Even with my headphones on listening to music I could still hear her. But that was a good thing, because every time she would yell out to me, I would run to where she was and did what she asked of me. I know her hearing was getting bad and I didn't show the respect she truly deserved about her hearing loss. I'm sorry mom for the times I yelled back.

And Good Lord did she ever love singing. It was always so out of pitch it drove me crazy at times. Making up her own little lyrics and singing songs from the Beatles. I didn't think I would actually miss that part.

She always spoke so highly of her family. She was so proud of her children. Words can never describe how she felt about us. Being a mother of 3 boisterous boys, me, my twin brother, and my older brother.

I will never forget that on Grandpa Joe's death bed how he held all three of our hands and told us that "Family is most important. Always be brothers and always stick together." And we have and will continue to do so.

Even through all of her pain and surgeries she was always eager to help out, no matter what the problem was. She always had her family in her heart and did everything she could to help us whenever we were in need.

You know, me and my mom were very much alike. We loved fashion, candles, music, and thinking where in the world we would love to travel to. We loved candles and making everything smell nice.

Every time I light them I will always think of her.

And the times my mom made my Dad change his clothes before they went out on dates. He doesn't know how to dress. Its up to me to help him now. I think most of his clothes are horrendous looking. But whatcha gonna do.

Her last three days she was in such unbearable pain. Worse than I have ever seen her and there was nothing we could do for her. I believe in my heart that the Lord heard her screams and felt her pain. And he decided that it was her time for her pain and suffering to end.

Thank you Lord for giving her peace at long last.

All of your family and friends are here thinking of you. Your memory will be with us forever.
